

Have a struggling handwriter?

Everyone is so unique. Some of us like to run, others like to sit and draw. While some of our girls love to write, our daughter Patience prefers to talk.

So, we let her talk all about everything she learns, but we still need her to write things down because, you know, that's a good thing, right?

Here are some reasons why CURSIVE handwriting can be beneficial:

- Fine motor skills. In cursive writing, the strokes used are continually changing according to the word being written. These movements are more demanding and cause the child to actually think about what they are writing.
- Brainpower. Cursive writing causes different parts of the brain to be used in order to complete each letter. Combined with repetition, this increases both cognitive development and function.
- Treatment for Dyslexia and ADD/ADHD. Did you know there is an actual treatment for dyslexia involving cursive handwriting? Children who have trouble with memory and focus find that writing in cursive helps them to stay on track and keeps their thoughts connected.

Because she had trouble making her hands cooperate with her brain, we tried all sorts of cursive programs, including Spencerian (based on old-fashioned copperplate) and some modern ones, but she continually struggled.

One day I took out my handy-dandy home-made McGuffey's script pages I created from the revised readers and it CLICKED! All-of-a-sudden (or at least after about 10 pages of practice) she could write legibly and neatly—hallelujah!

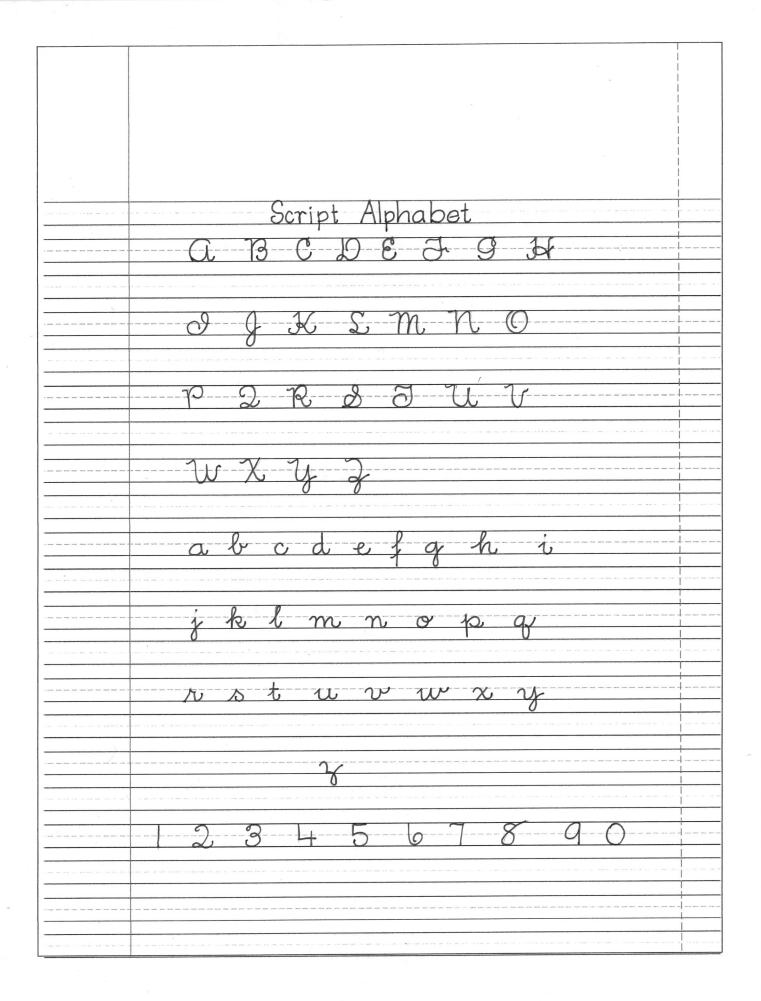

I had plans way back to share this with everyone, but I thought I should try and get the pages perfect—you know, with all sorts of software editing and the like. But I just have not found the time to get them perfect-looking, so I put the project aside.

When I realized how much this program has blessed Patience, I decided it was time to put it out there to bless others (besides, I have a brand new, hands-free scanner that works amazingly, so it must be God!).

So, here it is (warts and all). You are perfectly welcome to download, print, and use these pages as you see fit with your child(ren). Just start at the beginning and proceed as slowly or as quickly as you wish.

Sherry
