This Planner Belongs to:

Welcome

To the Mom Delights Everything Planner Beta Version.

This planner is meant to include elements of the different hats homeschooling moms wear.

Included are typical places for:

- Monthly Planning
- Weekly Planning
- Daily Planning

But there are also some not-so-typical places for:

- Master lists. This is essentially a “brain dump,” just a bit more organized and useful. The idea is to make a list of things that are weighing on your mind and put them into categories, then pray over them and ask God to help you get them done. After praying, look at your calendar/weekly/daily pages and see what you can plug in, then visit this list weekly/daily to see what else you can put into your days and weeks. Make sure and check things off as you see them accomplished, and if something doesn’t get done one month, move it over to the next (or get rid of it altogether if it becomes unnecessary or unrealistic).
- Homemaking focus. This is another form of the master list, only this time it’s about appointing tasks or areas of your home to be addressed daily, weekly, and monthly. For instance, you make your bed daily, clean and vacuum your car weekly, and then take care of other things such as cleaning outside windows monthly (or by-monthly or every six months). I have included a page of typical focus areas to get you started, and then a page where you can make your own lists.
- Meal planning. The pages included go from doing an inventory of refrigerator, freezer, and pantry, to creating ingredient lists based on each entrée, sides, etc., to taking the list and entering it into a grocery list that goes according to the aisles of your favorite grocery store.

- Homeschool recording. I actually have an entire book that works to record daily homeschool activity. I took the basic idea and added it into each week's spread, mostly because this makes it easier for me to record things, instead of grabbing another book to record this information in.
- Walking in the Spirit. It's very hard to find a practical planner that includes the spiritual. Either the planner is almost totally practical (with a not to God with a quaint scripture) or an entire planner directed to the modern guru-Christianity mantras that are focused on "success." While success is a good thing, it is subservient to obedience. This is why there are spaces where you can record what God is saying to you specifically. I know you noticed there is a scripture at the bottom of the weekly dashboard spread. These are not merely a "nod," but actual scriptures I have meditated on for years by writing them on index cards which I carry around with me. I put them here in case you get super busy and just need something that can quickly turn your gaze back on the heavenly.

Note: This planner is done in what is referred to as a "dashboard" style. This means there is a two-page spread meant to cover both daily and weekly activities, to-do's etc. I find this is so very helpful when I sit down to make plans and record what we have been up to (I have found that noting the significant things that happen each day helps in so many ways).

If you are still a bit fuzzy on using all this delicious planner goodness, visit my blog, MomDelights.com, and/or my YouTube channel of the same name.

Since this is a beta version, it only includes three month's worth of pages. I hope you will send me your impressions of this planner and help me determine what portions I should keep, change, or eliminate as I develop the academic Mom Delights Everything Planner I hope to have for purchase in May, 2022. Any help will be greatly appreciated! (I am also going to be using this beta version until then).

Meanwhile, I hope this small portion blesses and encourages you!

In the amazing love and grace of Christ,

Sherry
